OIL LAMP EXPLOSION CAUSES WOMAN'S DEATH

Mrs. Peter McGovern Meets Tragic Fate at Her Home Here.

DAUGHTER IS INJURED

Clad in Night Robe Miss Mame McGovern Rushes Into Burning Stairway And Carries Out Mother's Body Which Was Enveloped in Flames.

Sad and tragic was the death of Mrs. Peter McGovern, who early Sunday morning, last, stumbled and fell while carrying a lighted lamp and was so painfully burned that she expired about 2 o'clock Sunday afternoon in the Bellefonte hospital.

The accident was so sudden and of such a peculiar character that before members of the family could learn of her misfortune and render her much assistance she was burned almost to a crisp. She was in her night robe at the time. When she fell her head struck a stairway with such force as to render her unconscious. The lamp which she was carrying exploded, saturating her body with burning oil. As she lay helplessly at the foot of the stairway in her home the flames covered her unconscious form and her sad plight was not discovered until a daughter was awakened by the smoke which by that time had extended into all parts of the house.

Miss Mame McGovern, a daughter, was the one who found her mother's burning body lying in a heap at the foot of the stairway. Although also in her night robe she bravely rushed to where her mother's body lay and carried it to an outside porch. Her feet were severely cut by the glass from the shattered lamp, and her body was painfully burned.

Physicians and a priest were summoned to the McGovern home as quickly as possible and about 5 o'clock in the morning Mrs. McGovern was removed to the hospital. At that time she was conscious and seemed to realize the extent of her injuries. It was hoped that the fact that she had been unconscious while the flames were sweeping over her body might have prevented the fire being breathed into the lungs. However, her condition proved to be beyond medical skill and early Sunday afternoon she breathed her last. So badly burned was her body that it was decided, when it was removed to the McGovern home for interment, not to have the casket opened.

Had she lived but a few weeks longer Mrs. McGovern would have come into possession of a comfortable sum of money which she recently inherited. Naturally of a bright and cheery disposition, she was looking forward to the first of September, which was the time fixed for the payment of a bequest in her favor by the will of the late Miss Susan Collins. Her death intervened before she could enjoy the comforts that the small inheritance would have afforded.

The McGoverns reside on East High Street, nearby the county jail. Mrs. McGovern retired at her usual time on Saturday night and was in the best of spirits. During the night she had occasion to arise and go to the basement kitchen. She picked up the parlor lamp to enable her to find her way and was in the act of returning to her bedroom when the accident happened. She had taken but a step or two in the stairway leading from the basement kitchen when she stumbled and fell. The heavy lamp dropped with a crash and exploded. The force of the fall rendered Mrs. McGovern unconscious and the burning oil scattered over her prostrate body.

Miss Marjorie McGovern, another daughter, was the first to be awakened. She heard the crash caused by the exploding lamp. Quickly making her way to the first floor of the house she found the flames rapidly spreading and at once gave the alarm. It never occurred to her that her mother's body was lying in the stairway from which the flames were leaping out. Miss Mame McGovern, when she awoke, at once discovered that her mother was not in her bed. Heedless of the fact that she was in her night robe she hurried downstairs and not finding her mother there at once made her way to the basement kitchen. There, at the foot of the burning stairway, she found her mother's body, lying prostrate and slowly being devoured by the flames. It was but the work of a few seconds to seize the burning body and carry it to a point of safety. The body was blackened from head to foot, the flames had literally covered it and the one hope held out was that the fire had

WAR VETERAN DEAD

Venerable David C. Walter Passes Away; Was Over 82 Years Old.

A remarkable old man was claimed by death on Thursday of last week when David C. Walter passed away rather suddenly at the home of his niece, Mrs. Scott Walter, in Boggs township. Mr. Walter was over 82 years of age, but up to the day of his death he enjoyed the best of health and was far more active than many persons much younger. In fact, walking was his delight and he often scorned traveling in railroad trains no matter how far might be his destination. He was a familiar figure in Bellefonte and vicinity, always wearing the blue clothing of the soldier and carrying a little hand satchel. He was in Bellefonte a day or two prior to his death and when evening had come he cheerfully started to walk to his home beyond Milesburg. His illness was sudden and lasted but a few minutes. Seized with a hemorrhage of the lungs, he was beyond medical aid when found and soon had breathed his last.

Mr. Walter was a true blue old soldier and a stanch Republican. Many years ago he served in the old milita in Bellefonte. In April, 1861, he enlisted in the Tenth Regiment for the three-months service. He then enlisted in the Fifty-sixth Regiment, Penna. Vols., serving with distinction in defense of his country. He was proud of his war record and his happiest moments in his latter years were those spent in recalling the stirring incidents on the field of battle. He was a charter member of Gregg Post, No. 95, G. A. R., of Bellefonte, and until the last few years he made his home here. He was a member of the Bellefonte Lutheran church.

Funeral services were held on Saturday, interment being made in the Union cemetery in Bellefonte. The services were conducted by Rev. Mr. Oyler, of Milesburg, and were attended by a squad of Mr. Walter's old comrades in Gregg Post.

MINISTER DIES SUDDENLY.

Rev. Dr. Charles T. Steck Fatally Stricken; One Time Lived Here.

Rev. Dr. Charles T. Steck, at one time pastor of the Bellefonte Lutheran church, died suddenly on Saturday morning of last week at his late home at Shamokin. Dr. Steck was aged 75 yeors. He will at once be recalled by residents of Bellefonte and immediate vicinity. At the time of his pastorate here the Lutheran chuich was located on East High Street, opposite the Court House. The church building was destroyed at the time of the big fire which swept virtually every building on the south side of the Court House, above the Garman House.

As late as Friday night, last, Dr. Steck was in apparent good health. He was feeling all right when he arose on Saturday morning. He took his usual morning bath and then retired to his bedroom. A few minutes later a son, Eugene, heard a low moan coming from his father's room. Hurrying upstairs to learn the cause he found his father unconscious. Dr. Fred T. Steck, another son, was immediately summoned, but his father was beyond medical aid.

Dr. Steck was born at Hughesville, Lycoming county, and was in active service in the ministry for over fifty years. He served as pastor at Williamsport, Pittsburg, Indiana, Bellefonte and Shamokin. He was a veteran of the Civil war, having served in the Seventy-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers. He was a mamber of the Hamilton, Ohio, Masonic lodge and Knights Templar commandery of that city.

Shoe Store Changes Hands.

The large shoe store of A. H. Hartswick, at State College, was this week purchased by Nelson Robb, who recently returned with his family from Mississippi. Mr. Robb will take charge tomorrow, September 1. For a number of years Mr. Robb was engaged in the telephone business. A month or two ago he severed his connection with the telephone company which he represented in Mississippi and shipped his household goods back to Centre County. After looking over the field he concluded to embark in the shoe business. He decided that State College was a good field and the purchase of the Hartswick store followed. His numerous friends will wish him all the success in the world.

SAYS 7, NOT 6, YRS. BEST AGE TO ENTER SCHOOL

Professor Wagner Discusses Subject in Annual School Report.

DEPLORES UNDUE HASTE

Educator Urges Parents Not to Encourage Pushing Children Through School—Best Results are Obtained by Thorough Training.

That seven years instead of six is the proper age when children should be placed in school is the emphatic declaration of Professor Jonas E. Wagner, Supervising Principal of the Bellefonte public schools. Furthermore, Professor Wagner deplores what he terms a marked tendency on the part of parents to "rush their children through school."

These opinions, or conclusions, are given expression by Professor Wagner in the annual report of the Bellefonte public schools, which is just off the press. It is the aim of the School Board to place a copy of the report in every home in Bellefonte. It is in his report, submitted to the Board of Directors, that Professor Wagner takes occasion to discuss the danger resulting from any disposition to hurry a child through the schools and in which he also urges that the minimum age limit be fixed at seven instead of six years. On these points, and classifying the subject as "forced education," Professor Wagner says:

"There is a marked tendency today on the part of many parents to urge school officials to rush the children of these parents through the course as early as possible. This happens even when the physical condition of the child is such that, in the judgment of those in charge, great care should be exercised in the imposing of duties that will demand a great amount of energy. The results of such a tendency are more pronounced now, since the eight-grade system is becoming generally adopted all over the country, than they were under the older plan of nine years below the high school. The training that a boy or girl receives in the elementary grades or in the high school should not be forced; it is not a matter of completing the work in a minimum of time, or of getting through. It is rather a condition that permits of the developing of the mind and body slowly but surely under conditions that safeguard these young people at a critical age.

"While the system of education in this country places the child in school at six years of age, and graduates him from the hight school at eighteen, after spending eigh years in the grades and four in the high school, I am led to believe that the pace that is being set is too fast for the average boy or girl, and that the training consequently acquired is in many cases largely superficial. This is especially true since our schools have been standardized to such an extent that they are gradually losing their local identity. Going back to my original thought, I am almost convinced that seven years is a better age than six to begin formal school work. The law implies that six is the proper time, while many physicians urge eight as the best age—basing their opinions largely on the effect of confinement in school rooms on the physical organism. My own observation leads me to believe that a child placed in school at seven, where he must adapt himself to a more or less inflexible system, will be better off in most respects than if entered at an earlier age.

To cite one instance in support of this: During the last term one of the first grade rooms was made up of pupils who were mostly seven years of age. This was due to parents keeping their younger children home while the new building was being erected. These pupils then came in a year late. Now the ease with which they carried the work, and the unusual progress made, not to say anything concerning regularity of attendance and the little worry occasioned incident to looking after very young children, are well known facts to the teachers and cannot be controverted. In fact the class made such rapid progress that it became a problem how to arrange work that would not infringe too much on the rights of the next grade.

"If such results are characteristic of the average child entering school at seven years of age, and are maintained throughout the course, may we not conclude that our grammar grade pupil and high school graduate would be much more satisfactory than at present? This is a matter for parents to think about, but until more general data become available, school authorities must deal with the situation as it exists."

STREET RAILWAY FOR SNOW SHOE & CLARENCE

Application Filed at Harrisburg For Charter For New Company.

ELECTRIC LIGHTS OCT. 1

Residences and Business Places in Hustling Mountain Towns to Soon Enjoy Modern Conveniences—Building Electric Plant.

An electric street railway line is to be built between Snow Shoe and Clarence, giving to the residents of those towns a modern convenience in travel not enjoyed by Bellefonte and other places which claim to be more metropolitan. An application for a charter for the Snow Shoe Electric and Street Railway was filed at Harrisburg yesterday. The proposed incorporators are business men at Snow Shoe and Clarence. It is announced that the line will be built in the near future. It is proposed extending the line from the railroad station at Snow Shoe through that borough to Clarence, and also have it connect with the Snow Shoe park for the accommodation of picnic crowds. The distance to be covered is about two miles.

The residences and streets in the hustling towns of Snow Shoe and Clarence will be lighted with electricity by October 1.

Although not making much fuss about it, the recently organized Snow Shoe Electric Light Company is rushing through its plans to have the old lighting system give way to the more modern system of electricity. The work of wiring private residences and business places is making rapid progress. The poles for carrying the wires are about to be placed. The engines to furnish power for the dynamos are in position and four or five weeks more will mark the completion of the plant, which will put Snow Shoe and Clarence several paces ahead of many other inland towns.

The Snow Shoe Electric Light Company recently took over charters held by individuals and which covered both Snow Shoe borough and Snow Shoe township. The lighting charter for Snow Shoe borough was owned by Oscar Harm, W. D. O'Brian, John Kelley, Samuel Budinger and H. P. Kelley. The Snow Shoe township charter was owned by David Chambers, John G. Uzzle, James Uzzle, George B. Uzzle and W. E. Brown. The new company is capitalized at $15,000.

3 WOMEN CANDIDATES

Two for School Directors in Bellefonte; One at State College.

Bellefonte borough is promised the liveliest kind of a campaign in the interest of two women candidates for nomination for School Directors. State College is also scheduled to witness a campaign to elect one or more women to the School Board.

In Bellefonte the women are marshaling their forces to have Mrs. Charles Gilmore and Mrs. Roger S. Brouse nominated on the Republican and Democratic tickets, respectively, each for a term of two years.

It is entirely possible that the movement will cultminate in the filing of petitions to place the names of two candidates on both Republican and Democratic primary tickets. The women who are attending to the preliminary campaigning contend that they are proceeding along non-partisan lines. Their theory is that it would be beneficial to the school children to have at least two women on the Board of School Directors. A house-to-house canvass for votes for Mrs. Gilmore and Mrs. Brouse is but one of many plans being formulated.

At State College Mrs. W. L. Foster is a candidate for Republican nomination for School Director. Her friends have enlisted for a hustling campaign in her behalf. It is expected that at least one additional woman will enter the field for School Director at that place.

Starting New Cider Press.

BRINGS NOVEL SUIT

Treasurer Fink Asks Commission on Money Used in Court House Repairs.

The County Auditors met on Monday, August 28, with the County Commissioners and their attorneys to consider an application by the County Treasurer for the payment of a commission on the building fund for the remodeling of the Centre County Court house. The law provides that the joint board of Auditors and Commissioners shall fix the compensation of the County Treasurer except in Counties where specials Acts of the Legislature provide otherwise. In Centre County the Treasurer receives a fixed salary and certain commissions on licenses and unseated lands.

It was contended by the Treasurer that this building fund was outside ordinary services for the County as provided for in the special act of assembly and that he should receive a reasonable commission for his extra services in handling this money. The law states that where the joint board fails to fix the rate of compensation for the treasurer an appeal lies to the Court of Common Pleas and the action of the Court shall be final.

The Auditors and Commissioners felt that there was a moral claim on the part of the treasurer to be paid for this service in so much as he had services to perform that no other County Treasurer had been called on to perform for the same salary, and further that he had the added responsibility of a large sum of money, all during the time that the Court House was torn up and his office in a very inconvenient and disordered condition. The joint board and their counsel decided it would be better to fail to fix the compensation. This leaves the matter subject to an appeal to the Court, who would either fix the amount or construe the special act as covering all services of whatsoever nature rendered for the County by the Treasurer.

House of Lords Robbed.

A message yesterday from Centre Hall stated that the House of Lords had been entered during the day and an umbrella, a razor and several other articles were stolen. The thief was described as a man about 25 years old, wearing a barred cap and dark coat. When last seen he was heading toward Centre Hall. The Bellefonte police were notified of the theft and are on the lookout for the thief should he venture here.

Dr. Ament Abroad.

Dr. James E. Ament, the principal of the Pennsylvania State Normal School of Indiana, Pa. and Mrs. Ament are spending the summer vacation in Switzerland. Dr. and Mrs. Ament will not return to America until early in October as they plan to leave Liverpool on the S. S. Cedric which sails Sept. 28th.

Centre Co. Veteran Club Picnic.

The thirty-seventh annual picnic and reunion of the Centre County Veteran Club will be held at Grange Park, Centre Hall, on September 12.

GRAMLEY AGAIN HEADS SUNDAY SCHOOL ASS'N.

C. C. Shuey Chosen President But Was Unable to Accept.

HAD SUCCESSFUL YEAR

Gratifying Progress in all Parts of Centre County Reported at Recent Annual Convention—Officers Elected for Ensuing Year.

Delegates returning from the forty-second annual convention of the Centre County Sunday School Association, at Aaronsburg, speak in glowing terms of the proceedings of the several sessions and also of the hospitality of the citizens of that pretty town. The convention covered two days, August 21 and 22, and was presided over by the president of the association, Prof. C. L. Gramley. Seven denominations were represented and about 400 Sunday school workers were in attendance.

An interesting feature of the sessions was the presence of two State department superintendents, Mrs. Maud Junkin Baldwin, State Superintendent of Primary Work, and W. D. Stem, State Superintendent of Organized Adult Bible Class Work. Miss Martha Robison, a State field-worker, was also in attendance and gave impetus to the Home Department and Teacher-Training Work.

The report of the secretary was incomplete, owing to delay in the filing of statistics. It, however, showed a marked increase in the number of Cradle Rolls and Teacher-Training classes. In 1910 there were 168 schools, 2014 officers and teachers, 13,228 scholars, and with the Cradle Rolls and Home Departments there was a total of 16,124. The complete returns will show a large increase in the number of auxiliary departments in the schools.

The committee on nominations recommended the following for officers, who were accordingly chosen: C. C. Shuey, Bellefonte, president; G. L. Goodhart, Centre Hall, vice president; L. W. Nuttall, Philipsburg, secretary; C. H. Royer, Spring Mills, statistical secretary, A. Lukenbach, Bellefonte, treasurer; Mrs. L. W. Nuttall, Philipsburg, elementary superintendent; Rev. I. A. Sassaman, State College, home department superintendent; Rev. S. H. Engler, Pleasant Gap, teacher-training superintendent; Professor William Zeigler, Aaronsburg, organized adult Bible class superintendent; Rev. S. A. Snyder, Centre Hall, temperance superintendent.

Following the convention Mr. Shuey declined the presidency and Professor Gramley was prevailed upon to accept another term.

The Committee on Resolutions recommended the adoption of the New Graded Lessons as being the best for Sunday school instruction.

The convention appropriated $125 for State work for 1911-1912.

JAMES CALDWELL DEAD

Well Known Old Resident of Bellefonte Passes Away on Monday.

James Caldwell, one of the best known of the older residents of Bellefonte, passed away on Monday morning, last, at 4 o'clock. His death marked the climax to an illness that really dated back about four years, although he had only been bedfast about eight weeks.

Mr. Caldwell was born in Ireland and removed to Bellefonte when he was but 9 years of age. He made his home here ever since and was held in high esteem by a wide circle of friends. He was aged 73 years, 6 months and 14 days. Surviving are three children, Mary, John and Thomas, all residing in Bellefonte. Funeral services were held on Wednesday morning, at 10 o'clock, from the Catholic church, of which the deceased was a devout member.

M. E. Picnic At Martha.

The Methodist Episcopal Sunday shool of Martha will hold their picnic in the John Q. Miles grove, near Martha, on Saturday, September 2. An earnest effort is being made to make this picnic not only a delightful success but also a profitable one for all. Several ministers will be present and will address the audience on important subjects relative to Sunday school work. The Orion Glee Club, of Philipsburg, will entertain the people with excellent vocal selections. The club is composed of several gentlemen and a pianist and represent the best musical talent of Philipsburg. This is an exceptional opportunity to hear a musicol treat. Everybody cordially invited to attend and enjoy a day in the woods.

PENROSE PRAISES TAFT

Pennsylvania Senator Says Country Owes President Debt of Gratitude.

"It is likely that the tariff and monetary legislation will be the leading issues in the campaign of 1912, as was the case in 1896, when McKinley was elected,' said Senator Penrose of Pennsylvania after the adjournment of Congress.

The senator discussed the session and the prospects of the next one and their bearing on the election of 1912. He expressed the opinion that President Taft had been strengthened by recent events, and especially his vetoes of ill-considered tariff bills.

"The country owes a debt of gratitude to the President," said Senator Penrose. "On the whole the administration is coming out of the extra session with great credit and increased strength."

He anticipates the re-election of President Taft. Speaking of the future, Senator Penrose said:

"The next session of Congress will doubtless witness much discussion and many severe struggles. The Tariff Board will make its recommendation of facts for the information of Congress, the Democratic majority in the House doubtless will renew its effort to pass free trade revisions of the several tariff schedules and the legislation, when it comes to the Senate, will bring about a prolonged contest.

"As the Republican party is not in full control of the Senate it would look doubtful as to whether any tariff legislation can be enacted. The whole question will have to enter into the presidential election; as the tariff again doubtless will become the paramount issue and, as protection always has prevailed when the people were fully aroused as to the danger of the situation President Taft ought to be greatly strengthened in his prospects of re-election.

"The American people are convinced of the soundness of the protective doctrine and failure of Republicans in elections on this issue have occurred only when they were not fully aroused as to the situation.

"The monetary commission expects to hold meetings at important points throughout the country during the fall, when hearings will be given to merchants bankers and labor organizations, and to anyone who has anything to say upon the question.

"A bill undoubtedly will be recommended by the commission to Congress, embodying the result of its investigations and conclusions on the monetary question. Much discussion will ensue in both branches, which will be of great value in educating the public on these complicated questions. But with the great diversity of view and the complicated situation in Congress it is doubtful if any legislation can be obtained on monetary questions, and this matter also probably will be an issue in the presidential election."

Speaking of the session of Congress just ended, Senator Penrose said:

"The extra session just closed was called by the President for a single purpose, namely: the enactment of the reciprocity bill. Neither he nor the regular Republicans were prepared for any other tariff legislation at the extra session. Of course, however, the President was not able to restrict Congress and a Democratic House of Representatives insisted upon opening up all the issues involved in the tariff.

"With the successful end of the fight on tne reciprocity bill the only other object was to prevent ill-advised tariff legislation at a time when the Tariff Board had not made any report to Congress, giving full information and data regarding industrial conditions, and during the mid-summer period when no one could be expected to properly concentrate attention upon such important work.

"The bills passed by the House of Representatives were prepared hastily and were intended largely for political effect This is best illustrated by the designation of one of them by its framers as the 'farmers' free list bill.' It was drawn most carelessly and loosely and intended for effect in the agricultural sections of the country.

"When the measures came over to the Senate a coalition was formed quickly between the Democrats and the so-called insurgents which temporarily had control of the Senate and which placed the Democratic minority at the mercy of the insurgents, who insisted upon amendments which made the pending tariff bill neither free trade nor protection and were avowedly for the purpose of what was termed 'putting the President in a hole.'

"The cotton bill, especially as amended in the Senate, assumed almost a ridiculous form. The Reed amendment illustrates the absolute recklessness of the legislation. It provided that upon any duty in the amended bill being found to be higher than the duty under the Payne bill the secretary of the treasury should reduce the same 30 per cent. As the definitions were altered entirely in the cotton bill the effect of this would have been to have both laws in force with complications absolutely beyond the powers of imagination.

"The chemical schedule was added to the bill without the slightest consideration and probably without having received the study or attention from a single member of either body of Congress until the day it was offered, as the President has pointed out in his veto message. In the transmutation from specific to ad valorem rates in this schedule its framer, instead of reducing the tariffs on chemicals, as he professed to do, actually raised them. Nothing could demonstrate more clearly that the attempts at tariff legislation were all buncombe.

"The framer of the bills did not expect them to pass or they might have exercised greater care. There was nothing scientific in the framing of the schedules, either from a protection or a revenue standpoint. The passage of these measures would have precipitated an industrial and financial crisis in the country and would have brought about times as bad as those existing toward the latter part of Cleveland's second administration.

"The public only awoke toward the end of the session to the fact that the Republican party was no longer in control of either branch of Congress and the only hope of avoiding disastrous tariff legislation was in the presidential veto. The country owes a debt of gartitude to the President for his courageous stand against these measures and the opportunity afforded him to veto them. The reckless course the Democrats pursued in passing them has greatly strengthened the President and the Republican party in the country at large.

"On the whole the administration is coming out of the extra session with great credit and increased strength."

For Freckles and Sunburn.

Never mention the holiday complexion to the friend returning from a vacation. Such reference casts a gloom over the bright memories of out of door days, a gloom having its origin in burned shoulders, stinging face and peeled nose. It recalls embarrassing days and uncomfortable nights, hours spent in trying to alleviate the effects of sun and wind, pounds of cold cream and none too happy disposition.

A sudden change from indoor to outdoor life is certain to work havoc with the skin. The best plan to pursue is to exercise care at first and let the tanning process be a gradual one. Very foolish, indeed, is the girl who goes to the seashore or the country for a few weeks and there endeavors to acquire the healthy tan of the girl whose vacation lasts from May until September, and very different to the resultant texture of the skin, too.

In packing the trunk for the summer holiday it is well to realize the truth of the old adage. "An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure." Place a packet of powdered borax, oatmeal powder or some other water softener in the dressing case, as rain water is a rarity in the average hostelry. Tuck a lemon away in a convenient corner and rub the face and hands with a slice of it after bathing them. Allow it to remain on ten minutes, then apply cold cream, which is in turn gently wiped off.

The mistake of washing the face with cold cream is one commonly practiced by holiday folks. Such treatment clogs up the pores, making the skin so tender it burns easily. A better way is to use a thin coating, rub it in well, and gently wipe away with a soft cloth. Follow the motor ride or a blazing morning on the sands with a buttermilk bath.

Freckles are caused by an excess of pigment in the skin. They are not the result of the direct rays of the sun and may be prevented by the wearing of a red or brown veil. A solution of one per cent mercurie chloride in alcohol is an irritant which, if applied daily will sometimes cause the cells to exude the coloring and freckles will disappear.

Kansas City Gets Moose.

Kansas City will get the 1912 meeting of the Loyal Order of Moose, according to the vote taken at the national convention of the order held last week at Detroit. Los Angeles was the nearest competitor, securing 188 votes. Three hundred and eighty-five delegates favored Kansas City.

A resolution was unanimously adopted at the convention to donate $1,000 to the widow of Mounted Patrolman Franklin M. Smith, who lost his life last week while trying to protect spectators watching the Moose parade when a fire department water tower truck dashed through the lines.

Patrolman Smith was swept from his mount and thrown under the wheels of the truck. He died a few hours later.

ALL-AMERICAN FERTILIZER

May Make United States Independent of Foreign Potash and Nitrates.

The field force of the United States Geological Survey is prosecuting searches for deposits of minerals which shall furnish the three necessary elements of plant food that are contained in "complete fertilizer," namely, phosphate rock, nitrate salts, and potash salts. The Survey has already discovered and surveyed enormous deposits of phosphate rock, and 2,398,590 acres of public land containing phosphate, withdrawn at the recommendation of the Geological Survey, are now waiting legislation by Congress to enable their development. In order, however, to insure an "all-American" fertilizer, regardless of importations from other countries, it remains to discover deposits of nitrate of soda and potash salts. As both of these minerals are readily soluble and are not to be found as "outcrops" like ordinary rocks, the mission of the Survey is not an easy one. Nevertheless, it is believed that the geologic conditions prevailing throughout a large portion of the arid West favored the accumulation, during earlier periods of the earth's history, of both of these salts and that if these still exist in concentrated deposits it is only a question of search to discover them. Hardly anything could be suggested which would be of greater assistance to the American farmer than the discovery of commercial deposits of either of these necessary fertilizing minerals.

Weevils in Wheat.

A prominent farmer in the western part of the State writes to Prof. H. A. Surface, Economic Zoologist of the Department of Agriculture, asking how he can rid his wheat in the granary of weevils which are destroying it. The following reply to this inquiry may interest others who are suffering from the same pest:

"To destroy the weevil injuring your wheat, I would recommend you to put your wheat into tight barrels or boxes, and over each pour at least a teacupful of the liquid known as Carbon bisulfide, and cover it with a wet blanket.

"If you have a tight granary you can fumigate it in the granary. Pour over it one pound of the carbon bisulfide for each hundred bushels of grain, and cover it with wet blankets to hold down the fumes. Keep fire away, as these fumes are explosive the same as those of gasolene or benzine. Let it remain covered for a day or two. It may be possible that you may have to use a greater amount of the material than this, as much depends upon the amount of ventilation received. At any time after fumigation you can examine the wheat and see if the weevil is cleaned up. If not, repeat the dose by using it stronger.

"It, of course, is decidedly wrong to put any new wheat in a granary, bin, box or barrel with old wheat that is infested, or even where the weevil have not been cleaned out thoroughly. Spraying with five per cent. kerosene or crude carbolic acid is still more certain to clean them up in the bins and granaries."

Loss of Time Means Loss of Pay.

Kidney trouble and the ills it breeds means lost time and lost pay to many a working man. M. Balent, 1214 Little Penna St., Streator, Ill., was so bad from kidney and bla der trouble that he could not work, but he says: "I took Foley Kidney Pills for only a short time and got entirely well and was soon able to go back to work, and am feeling well and healthier than before." Foley Kidney Pills are tonic in action, quick in results—a good friend to the working man or woman who suffers from kidney ills. Sold by C. M. Parrish.

The Better Choice.

Redd—I notice some of these cheap cigar store wooden Indians have tomahawks in their hands and others offer a bunch of cigars.

Greene—Well, take my advice and choose the tomahawk. You'll get over it sooner.

After a heavy meal, take a couple of Doan's Regulets, and give your stomach, liver and bowels the help they will need. Regulets bring easy, regular passages of the bowels.

He Meant Well.

Lady—I must ask you to take back that parrot I bought some time ago. He shocks all my friends by his dreadful language.

Fancier—Ah, you've got to be careful 'ow you talk before 'im. 'E's terrible quick to learn.

WHEN HER BACK ACHES

A Woman Finds All Her Energy and Ambition Slipping Away.

Bellefonte women know how the aches and pains that come when the kidneys fail make life a burden. Backache, hip pains, headaches, dizzy spells, distressing urinary trouble, all tell of sick kidneys and warn you of the stealthy approach of diabetes, dropsy and Bright's disease. Doan's Kidney Pills permanently cure all these disorders. Here's proof of it in a Bellefonte woman's words:

Mrs. L. Ingram, 382 E. Bishop St., Bellefonte, Pa., says: "Doan's Kidney Pills have done a world of good and I feel that I cannot speak too highly of them. I suffered intensely from backache and my kidneys gave me a great deal of annoyance. Nothing helped me until I procured Doan's Kidney Pills at Green's Pharmacy Co. In return for the improvement they made I publicly recommended them in October, 1907, and at this time I can say that I have had no further trouble from my kidneys. You are at liberty to use my name as one who recommends Doan's Kidney Pills from personal experience."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States.

Remember the name—Doan's—and take no other.

THE LAST MAN.

A Story of British Columbia.

By CLARISSA MACKIE.

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

The manager of the Great Mines Outfitting company of Victoria, British Columbia, frowned as the door of his private office was pushed softly open and the chief clerk deferentially placed a card on his desk.

Woolson scanned the card thoughtfully, his frown growing blacker and deep lines settling about his mouth. At last he flung back his head and shook his broad shoulders as if preparing himself for contest. His face became an urbane mask as he turned to the waiting clerk.

"Send him in," he said briefly.

Again the door opened and closed, and a short, stout man approached the manager's desk.

"Mr. Arthur St. Claire Woolson?" he asked suavely.

"My name is Woolson," replied the manager curtly. The sound of his several appellations savored too strongly of that hateful period when they had blazed in black type across the front pages of English newspapers. Now he glanced down at the card before him and added: "You are Inspector Duffy of Scotland Yard. Sit down, sir, and tell me what I can do for you."

The inspector sat down and pulled out a large notebook from an inner pocket and consulted it nearsightedly.

"In the matter of Laurence Kimball," he snapped out suddenly. His bulldog voice did not accord with his feline appearance. The contrast was startling.

Woolson stiffened in his chair. "I thought that matter was settled when Kimball was convicted and imprisoned," he said indifferently.

Inspector Duffy consulted his book again. "Laurence Kimball served one year of his sentence and then escaped from Dartmoor prison on June 3 last. I have traced him across the Atlantic, through Canada and British Columbia to Victoria."

"You have caught him then?" There was almost a sneer in Woolson's voice.

The other reddened to the roots of his pale hair, and his catty smile widened. His voice growled the deeper when he replied:

"I lost the trail. I know he arrived in Victoria July 25 because he was recognized. Since then he has dropped out of sight."

"I will instruct our superintendent to aid you in every way. Here is a card which will admit you to every department of our company."

The inspector hesitated and shot a furtive glance at the face of the manager. "Of course his majesty's warrant opens all doors to my knock, but I always choose the other way when it is possible."

"That is very considerate of you, inspector," said Woolson ironically. "Do you know of any reason why I should be unwilling for you to seek your escaped—man?" he challenged.

"Escaped convict," corrected Duffy, with a square look into Woolson's stern eyes. "I can think of no reason except that he was your friend—and pardon me, sir, your testimony was given reluctantly. I hope you won't take offense, but I've got to have your best help, whether you are willing or not. Besides accomplishing the ends of justice, there's a big reward out for Kimball's capture, and I want it." He smiled greedily.

"A reward large enough to lure you to the uttermost end of the earth, I fancy," observed Woolson carelessly.

A rueful look overspread the ruddy face of the inspector. "Hardly that," he responded. "The Yukon is the limit so far as I'm concerned. My time's worth something at home."

Woolson touched a bell. "Mr. Jameson will be at your service, inspector, and if you decide to go to the Yukon one of our steamers will sail at 6 tomorrow morning. Here is a pass that will take you up the coast to your destination, whatever it may be."

After the detective and Jameson had left the room the manager turned to the window and stared out at the wharf. Ten, fifteen, twenty minutes he stood there, motionless. Then he put on his hat and went out.

The long stream of coolies wavered back and forth across the gangplank. The tallyman yelled lustily until Woolson's drawling accents cut him short.

"Hodgson, you may discharge the man on the end of the line. He's a clumsy beggar. Send him to the paymaster tonight."

Whenever the long line straggled to its final end the last man, tall and gaunt, a ragged cloth tied about his head and half concealing a yellow countenance, would pause to stretch his lean and shrunken arms bare to the shoulder. He walked with a stoop from the waist, and the burdens that he bore seemed all too heavy for the wavering gait with which he followed his companions.

Always he was the last man to reach the gangplank with his burden for the steamer's hold, and, returning, he was the last to leave the vessel. The tallyman swore at him in various languages, and his mates grinned childishly at his meek acceptance of the insults that were heaped upon his bowed back.

Woolson, observing all this, clinched his strong hands on the counter. Once his mouth opened to reprimand the tallyman, but it snapped shut as he observed the roly poly form of Inspector Duffy coming down the wharf.

The detective cast a sleepy glance over the men on the wharf, stared impudently into Hodgson's face and when that belligerent gentleman flung an angry word at him flashed open his coat and displayed his badge to the utter confusion of the tallyman.

This betrayal of petty vanity on the part of the inspector brought a gleam to Woolson's brooding eyes. He stepped out of the cage and approached the detective. The line of coolies was stringing off on to the wharf, and the bowed gaunt form of the last man would soon approach to pick up the boxes against which the inspector was carelessly leaning.

Woolson thrust an arm through the inspector's pudgy one and turned him away. "Come over to the hotel and have something," he said genially. "Can't you drop your duties long enough to spend a sociable half hour?"

Inspector Duffy reddened with tickled vanity. "Thank you, sir, I'll be pleased to join you," he agreed as he accompanied the manager across the wide street where the glittering glass front of a large hotel reflected the busy scenes on the wharf.

Inside the hotel Woolson sat facing the water front. "Making out pretty well?" he asked at length.

The inspector shook his head. "No trace of his being in the city," he said ruefully. "You see, Mr. Woolson, I've been in Victoria for two days past and raked the place clean, and I went to you as a last resort. I've cross questioned your men, and I've got a slight clew—that's all."

"You were saying you had a clew," suggested Woolson as the inspector yawned sleepily.

"There is a slight clew. One of your men described a man that bought an outfit last week. At any rate, I feel justified in carrying my chase to the Yukon," said Mr. Duffy.

"Our boats are at your disposal," murmured Woolson, lighting another cigar.

"Thanks. I'll take that one in the morning. Now, if you'll excuse me, sir, I'll go to my lodgings and get some traps together."

On the steps of the hotel Woolson stood and watched Inspector Duffy roll down the street until the crowded pavements swallowed him. Twilight was falling, and the water front was darkened with the approaching end of the day. In another half hour the coolie gang would stop work.

The manager of the Great Mines company went back to his office and worked rapidly for several moments. Then he made his way to the wharf and entered the paymaster's cage. He sent the man away on some errand and called Hodgson. The tallyman came, throwing blustering commands over his shoulder at his coolies.

"Send that fellow around for his money, Hodgson," directed his superior, "that Chinaman I told you to dismiss."

"Right, sir." And Hodgson bustled away.

Woolson stood stiffly, waiting while the disreputable figure of the last man crept up to the wicket. He lifted his head and peered through at the big red and white skinned Englishman with a shrinking fear in his own dirt concealed features. Coarse black hair straggled into his dark eyes, and a long cue hung down his back. He thrust a trembling hand through the wicket as Woolson shoved a fat envelope toward him.

"Laurence," whispered Woolson guardedly, with his eyes fixed at some point beyond the man's head, "cut it! Duffy of Scotland Yard is after you. There's plenty of money in this envelope. It's yours in remembrance of old times and, God willing, in anticipation of new and better times to come. Lie low until midnight and get aboard the Queen of the Sea. You can easily lose yourself in China."

The coolie drew a deep breath. "You recognized me at once then, Arthur?" he gasped.

"Yes—never mind, it's all right, old man. Keep me posted of your movements. Better stick to the Yangtze valley until it blows over. Perhaps I can help you regain what you've lost." He laid his broad hand over the thin one of the coolie.

The man's face worked strangely for a moment, and he turned away; then with a sudden impulse he flung the envelope back on the desk and said sharply: "I can't do it, Arthur. I'm too big a scoundrel as it is—I have wronged you enough. I'll find Duffy and go back to England with him. After I've taken my medicine I'll come back, and perhaps then I'll be worthy to grasp your hand"— He choked suddenly.

Woolson spoke gruffly. "I've done nothing more than you would have done in like circumstances," he said to the weaker one. "You make me deuced happy, old man, though I writhe to think of your doing time again. When you come back there will be a place for you with me." He wrung the thin hand and winced as hot tears fell on his own. Then he was conscious that the "last man" had disappeared.

After he had dismissed Hodgson and paid that bewildered tallyman his due of wages Woolson sauntered back to his office to await a message from Inspector Duffy.

One hour passed and another, and his face grew haggard and bitter with renewed disappointment. Then the message came.

"Got him!" bellowed the inspector joyfully. "Came and gave himself up—was dressed like a lord and cool as you please! Jolly odd how I missed him, ain't it?"

Woolson hung up the receiver and smiled contentedly.

GOT THE WRONG CUE.

Tom Keene Didn't Give the Same One McCullough Did.

When Tom Keene took long tours through the northwest, where tragedy is still in favor, he used to keep his company down in numbers on account of the jumps and the high railroad fares, writes Drury Underwood. There were various ways of doing this, such as by doubling and by putting a trio suit on the electrician now and then. One play had a long cast, however, and the advance agent was instructed to pick up some local man for one of the "bits." Keene arrived in a one night stand and made his way to the theater to meet the recruit for the play in question. He introduced himself to the manager and explained the situation. The local dignitary said: "That has been arranged, Mr. Keene. Jones, the house property man, is going to play the part. I'll send for him."

Jones appeared presently. He yawned and stretched his arms continually, putting two or three gaps in every sentence. The part consisted of two lines, but on them hung the vital situation of the play. Keene sized Jones up for his wardrobe and then asked him if he was ready to rehearse.

"No," said Jones. "I played the part with McCullough twice."

That seemed promising, and Keene was satisfied. The particular scene of the performance came, and Keene, looking into the wings, saw Jones yawning and stretching. He gave him the speech for his entrance, but Jones did not budge. He repeated it without success and then had to fake the scene, which fell flat, ruining the performance. Keene came off the stage in a fury and spluttered, "Why didn't you come on when you saw me waiting there?"

"Didn't get my cue," said Jones.

"I gave it to you twice."

"Not the cue McCullough gave me."

"What cue did he give you?"

"Come on, you Idaho sausage."

He Knew Him.

The year the Chicago Cubs won their first world's championship a crazy mob of enthusiasts pursued Frank Chance, trying to raise him on their shoulders. Chance struggled to free himself. A big, red faced man, purple from rooting, beat the manager on the back and yelled, "Don't you know me, Frank?"

"Yep," replied Chance coolly. "You're the fellow who hit me on the head with a lemon last fall when the Sox beat us."

Testing the Dose.

On a wet and bitter night in winter old Dr. B. was summoned from his snug home to attend a farmer threatened with pneumonia. The farmer's wife, a little woman resembling a scared bird, reported that the patient called for hot punch, but that she awaited the doctor's permission before giving it.

"Make it," said Dr. B. "Make it as soon as you can, strong and hot, and let me see it."

The little woman soon fluttered in with the smoking punch. The doctor took it from her hands, examined it, smelled it, then drank it off and smacked his lips in critical satisfaction.

"Exactly," he said. "Give your husband one just like it, only half as much."—Lippincott's.

The Widow's Complaint.

"Yes," said a sad eyed man, "I married the widow of a man who was hanged, and I thought that under the circumstances there would be no comparisons in connection with the late lamented, but I was mistaken."

"Did she praise him just the same?" rejoined his friend.

"Well, not exactly," was the reply, "but we had not been married a week before she declared that hanging was too good for me."

Honors Were Even.

When the members of a Greek letter society in Barnard college were initiating two girl neophytes into frat mysteries just before last commencement exercises, one junior, who was obeying orders, waited until a street car on Broadway, New York, had passed her, then chased it for a block, waving her hand and calling frantically to the conductor, who at last held up his car, the eyes of all the passengers were on the flushed young woman. Then, instead of boarding the car, the initiate daintily lifted her skirt, placed a small foot on the car step and calmly as possible tied her shoe, taking her time to it. This done, she smiled prettily at the conductor and walked away after sweetly saying "Thank you."

"No, miss," said the conductor heartily; "I want to thank you."

A JOINT RESOLUTION

Proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, so as to consolidate the courts of common pleas of Allegheny County.

Section 1. Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania in General Assembly met, That the following amendment to the Constitution of Pennsylvania be, and the same is hereby, proposed, in accordance with the eighteenth article thereof:—

That section six of article five be amended, by striking out the said section, and inserting in place thereof the following:

Section 6. In the county of Philadelphia all the jurisdiction and powers now vested in the district courts and courts of common pleas, subject to such changes as may be made by this Constitution or by law, shall be in Philadelphia vested in five distinct and separate courts of equal and co-ordinate jurisdiction, composed of three judges each. The said courts in Philadelphia shall be designated respectively as the court of common pleas number one, number two, number three, number four, and number five, but the number of said courts may be by law increased, from time to time, and shall be in like manner designated by successive numbers. The number of judges in any of said courts, or in any county where the establishment of an additional court may be authorized by law, may be increased, from time to time, and whenever such increase shall amount in the whole to three, such three judges shall compose a distinct and separate court as aforesaid, which shall be numbered as aforesaid. In Philadelphia all suits shall be instituted in the said courts of common pleas without designating the number of the said court, and the several courts shall distribute and apportion the business among them in such manner as shall be provided by rules of court, and each court, to which any suit shall be thus assigned, shall have exclusive jurisdiction thereof, subject to change of venue, as shall be provided by law.

In the county of Allegheny all the jurisdiction and powers now vested in the several numbered courts of common pleas shall be vested in one court of common pleas, composed of all the judges in commission in said courts. Such jurisdiction and powers shall extend to all proceedings at law and in equity which shall have been instituted in the several numbered courts, and shall be subject to such changes as may be made by law, and subject to change of venue as provided by law. The president judge of said court shall be selected as provided by law. The number of judges in said court may be by law increased from time to time. This amendment shall take effect on the first day of January succeeding its adoption.

A JOINT RESOLUTION

Proposing an amendment to section eight, article nine, of the Constitution of Pennsylvania.

Section 1. Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania in General Assembly met, That the following is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, in accordance with the provisions of the eighteenth article thereof:—

Amendment to Article Nine, Section Eight.

Section 2. Amend section eight, article nine, of the Constitution of Pennsylvania, which reads as follows:—

"Section 8. The debt of any county, city, borough, township, school district, or other municipality or incorporated district, except as herein provided, shall never exceed seven per centum upon the assessed value of the taxable property therein, nor shall any such municipality or district incur any new debt, or increase its indebtedness to an amount exceeding two per centum upon such assessed valuation of property, without the assent of the electors thereof at a public election in such manner as shall be provided by law; but any city, the debt of which now exceeds seven per centum of such assessed valuation, may be authorized by law to increase the same three per centum, in the aggregate, at any one time, upon such valuation," so as to read as follows:—

Section 8. The debt of any county, city, borough, township, school district, or other municipality or incorporated district, except as herein provided, shall never exceed seven per centum upon the assessed value of the taxable property therein, nor shall any such municipality or district incur any new debt, or increase its indebtedness to an amount exceeding two per centum upon such assessed valuation of property, without the assent of the electors thereof at a public election in such manner as shall be provided by law; but any city, the debt of which now exceeds seven per centum of such assessed valuation, may be authorized by law to increase the same three per centum, in the aggregate, at any one time, upon such valuation, except that any debt or debts hereinafter incurred by the city and county of Philadelphia for the construction and development of subways for transit purposes, or for the construction of wharves and docks, or the reclamation of land to be used in the construction of a system of wharves and docks, as public improvements, owned or to be owned by said city and county of Philadelphia, and which shall yield to the city and county of Philadelphia current net revenue in excess of the interest on said debt or debts and of the annual installments necessary for the cancellation of said debt or debts, may be excluded in ascertaining the power of the city and county of Philadelphia to become otherwise indebted: Provided, That a sinking fund for their cancellation shall be established and maintained.

TO SHEAR THE LAMBS.

Rumor has it that the Democratic bosses plan levying a heavy assessment on the several nominees for County offices immediately after the primaries and then devoting the entire amount to elect two Democratic County Commissioners and a Democratic Sheriff. The Democratic nominees for County Treasurer, Recorder, Register, Prothonotary, District Attorney and County Auditors are to contribute to a "jack-pot" to help three others, only, be elected. The sharks of Wall Street might well come to Centre County and learn a pointer or two on how easy it is to shear the lambs, or at least how easy some persons think it is.

SURE, WHY NOT?

Since Jim Schofield is not wanted by the bosses for the Democratic nomination for County Treasurer, and —

Since Dave Gingery has been blacklisted by the bosslets for the Democratic nomination for Sheriff, and—

Since Francis Speer and Edward McKinley are to be bowled out by the bosses for the Democratic nomination for Recorder, and—

Since Dave Foreman is the first-last-and-all-the-time choice of the near-bosses in preference to Ciny Hoffer for Democatic nomination for Prothonotary, and--

Since William L. Noll is slated for Democratic nomination for County Commissioner because the few who made the slate expect to tap his barrel,

Why not have a mourners meeting, with Schofield, Gingery, Hoffer, Speer and other candidates who are not good enough in the estimation of the bosses, seated on the front row. Why not? Five minutes devoted to meditation and fifteen to speaking out in meeting might discolor the atmosphere but it would certainly be worth the price of admission.

A Plea for the Classes.

Having been for nearly twenty years a student and teacher of the Latin and Greek languages, I trust I may be pardoned for saying a word in favor of their study as a means of mental culture. For obvious reasons, I am compelled at present to confine myself to the advantages of the study of Latin.

In doing so, I shall allude only to first things, or the primary principles in a course of education. The human mind, like the human body, is made up of faculties and their functions. The word education is of Latin derivation, and signifies to lead forth, expand, or develop.

Hence education, in its primary sense, consists in the complete and symmetrical development of all the faculties of the human mind.

I would here very briefly refer to a few of the advantages of the study of Latin as a means to this end, but time will not permit to enlarge upon these points. First: It cultivates and develops the perceptive faculties, awakening and enlarging our conception of things in general. Second: It cultivates the judgment. Third: No study aids so much in the acquiring of a copia verborum, or a ready command of language. Fourth: A knowledge of the Latin language is absolutely essential in studying the etimology, or origin and derivation of words. While the English language is commonly regarded as of Anglo-Saxon origin, yet it probably contains more words derived from the Latin and Greek than from all other sources. Fifth: The fact that Latin is no longer a spoken language, is no argument against the study of it. Much of the choicest literature of the ages is recorded in it. This is especially true of the theology of the middle ages, both Catholic and Protestant. It also contains much scientific and philosophic literature.

In order to stimulate and encourage its students to greater diligence and higher attainments in the study of that language, I hereby agree to pay to that student of the Bellefonte High School who is a member of the graduating class of the year 1912, and who attains the greatest proficiency and passes the best examinations in the Latin language, the sum of five dollars, as an incentive to such diligence. Yours truly,

THOMAS C. VANTRIES.

YOUR HELP IS NEEDED

Every Friend of Sunday School Work is Asked to Read This Appeal.

The executive committee of the Centre County Sabbath School Association want you to help them answer the following questions: At the State Sunday School Convention, which is to be held at New Castle, October 11, 12 and 13, will Centre County be rated as a first, second or third class County? At present it stands as a third class County in Sunday school work. In order to reach the first class, or Front Line position, there must be Cradle Rolls in at least 50 per cent. of the schools; Home Departments in at least 30 per cent., and teacher training classes that have taken at least one examination during the year ending with the first of October in 20 per cent. of the schools.

There will be at least 50 of the 67 counties in the Front Line this year. Centre County can be one of these if every school in the County will at once go to work and organize the departments that it lacks. Will you help the executive committee in this work?

The situation in detail is as follows: There are 170 schools in the County. That means there must be 85 cradle rolls reported by October. But 54 have been reported up to this time. If you have a cradle roll in your school and are not sure that the County elementary superintendent, Mrs. L. W. Nuttall, of Philipsburg, has heard of it, notify her at once. If you have none, organize one at once, and notify her as soon as you have done so. Do not put the matter off.

There must be Home Departments in at least 51 schools. The executive committee have report of the following: Philipsburg, M. E., and Pres.; Snow Shoe, M. E.; Port Matilda, Pres., Fleming, M. E.; Howard, M. E.; Hublersburg, Ref.; Bellefonte, Ref., U. B., M. E., Luth., U. Ev.; State College, Luth.; Centre Hall, M. E.; Sinking Creek. Pres.; Baileyville, Pres.; Rebersburg, Luth. If your school has a Home Department and it is not on this list, notify the County Home Department Superintendent, Rev. I. S. Sassamn, State College, at once. If you have no Home Department, organize one at once, and let Mr. Sassaman know as soon as you have done so. If you need help let him know that also.

There must be at least 34 teacher training classes that have taken not less than one examination during the year. The committee has record of the following that have done so: Bellefonte, U.B. and M. E.; Philipsburg, Pres. and M.E.; S. Philipsburg, U. B.; Rebersburg, U. B; Rebersburg, U. Ev.; Snow Shoe, M. E.; Howard, Ref., and M. E.; Spring Mills, Union; Port Matilda, Union. There are probably enough classes at work to make up the required number if they will take the examinations between this and the first of October. If you belong to a class that has taken an examination but is not on the foregoing list, will you notify the superintendent of this work in the County, Rev. S. H Engler, Pleasant Gap, at once. If you belong to a class that has not yet taken the examination, but can do so before it is too late to help the County, will you tell him this. Or, if you are in a class that has taken no examination, and will not be ready for one soon, will you tell him that, and let him tell you how you can help in making the County a Front Line County, any way.

This matter of notifying the various County officers is a very important one. If you have not found the name of your school in either of the lists, and it ought to be there, do not wait for some one else to send along the information. Do it yourself. It will be better to hear a number of times from some school than not to hear at all.

Do not forget that whether or not Center County is a Front Line County in Sunday school work depends largely on YOU.

Old Time Trade Signs.

On nearly all street corners even in the largest metropolis of Europe may be found relics of the middle ages and of the earliest times. Take, for instance, the wooden image of a shoe, which every cobbler hangs out above his door. It goes back for its origin to the Rome of the pre-Christian era. In the ruins of the lava buried cities of Herculaneum and Pompeii many shop signs of stone and terra cotta have been discovered, the forerunners of those that for centuries adorned the highways not only of Europe, but of the new world. Among them was the emblem of the shoemaker's trade, a Cupid carrying a dainty pair of women's shoes. But the Romans did not stop there. They used the image of a goat to indicate the dairies, that of a mule driving a mill to point out the bakers' shops and a bush of evergreen to direct the thirsty traveler to a tavern. This particular sign gave rise to the English proverb, "Good wine needs no bush."

The View From an Aeroplane.

It is a great surprise to the uninitiated to see how uniform the surface of the earth appears when viewed from a great altitude. Although individual objects are hard to identify, such things as rivers, lakes and railroads are easily recognized by their contour, direction or some slight individuality or characteristic which can readily be shown upon a map, especially if the maps are made or corrected by men who fly above the earth and get an accurate and literal bird's-eye view of its surface. Objects which seem to loom up with the greatest clearness to one standing on the surface of the earth appear very different and quite insignificant when viewed from above, while a patch of colored soil which would not be noticed at all by a person standing on the ground is a most valuable landmark to the air sailor. — Columbian Magazine.

Jumping Cocoons.

Many visitors to the southwestern states and Mexico have amused themselves by watching the queer motions of "jumping beans," the seed vessels of a plant, each of which contain the pupa of an insect whose spasmodic movements cause the bean to hop and roll about.

More remarkable are the "jumping cocoons" found in South Africa. The cocoon is formed by the mother insect and is very hard. The pupa when ready to emerge must cut its way out. The front of its head has a sharp, chisel-like edge, and by driving this against the inside of the shell it gradually makes a hole. The violent motions of the pupa within cause the cocoon to leap so that one has been seen to spring out of a small glass tumbler. —St. Louis Republic.

Saved Storage Charges.

Young men with meager salaries evolve financial makeshifts abhorrent to the moral and physical sensibilities of their opulent elders. Said one young spriz of boarding house gentility to another who expected to seek new quarters upon his return from a two months' trip on the road:

"What are you going to do with all this personal truck that is cluttering up your room? It will cost you anyhow a dollar a month for storage."

"Not the way I am working things," said the man who was going away. "I have purposely refrained from paying board for four weeks, and the landlady will hold my stuff. Of course I shall square up when I come back and get it again, and in the meantime she will give it free storage."—New York Times.

Lawyers on a Strike.

Over 300 years ago one of the most unusual strikes ever recorded took place in Paris, when all the lawyers walked out, so to speak. A law or ordonnance was issued and promulgated by the French king Henry III. ordering all lawyers to sign their pleadings and to state the amount they were charging their clients for their services. This was done so that the lawyers could be properly and sufficiently taxed on their income. The lawyers objected, and the strike, causing an entire stay of judicial proceedings, followed. Peace was restored by the nonenforcement of the ordonnance, though it was not repealed.

Work and Worry.

"Worry wears out more people than work does," said the ready made philosopher

"Of course it does," replied Mr. Growcher, "for the simple reason that so many of us would rather put in our time worrying about work than doing it."—Washington Star.

not penetrated to the lungs. Mrs. McGovern recovered consciousness and seemed most concerned for the daughter who had been burned and cut by glass while carrying her from the burning stairway. Later she asked that she be removed to the hospital. Less than ten hours later she had passed away.

The flames at the McGovern home were extinguished before they did much damage to the property or the household effects.

Deafness Cannot be Cured.

By local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

Mrs. Allen Buckwalter, with her two boys, after a month's visit among Centre County folks, returned last Friday to their home at Lancaster. Mr. Buckwalter spent several days in the valley on business.

Miss Viola Burwell has been elected to teach the Glades school during the winter term. She is a splendid young lady, is well qualified to become a first-class teacher and we wish her much success in her school.

Mrs. S. M. Weber and three children came up from the National Capitol for an outing at Grandpa Henry Meyer's home, where they were joined by Miss Mary, a teacher in New Jersey, for a merry time at the old home tree.

Rev. Ralph M. Illingsworth joined his family at the Snyder home on Monday, after a most delightful cruise fishing in New Foundland waters the past month. With his family Mr. Illingsworth returned on Monday to their home at Marietta.

Woods Bathgate, wife and little ones are spending their usual vacation at the home of his mother, near Lemont. Woods has been holding down a clerkship with the Pennsylvania Railroad the past ten years and has hopes of getting on the pension list.

The chicken supper given by the ladies of the Reformed church in the I. O. O. F. hall on Saturday evening was a splendid success, and the treasury is richer by eighty dollars. The money is to be devoted to wiping out the debt on the concrete sidewalk along the church property.

Everybody is cordially invited to attend a lawn social at the home of John H. Bailey on Thursday evening, September 7. Ice cream, cake, candies and other delicacies will be sold, the proceeds to be devoted to the Pine Grove Presbyterian church. Come an enjoy an evening of pleasure.

Griffy Lytle, an old, battle-scarred veteran of the Civil war, who did valiant service in the 49th, Penna Vol. Cavalry, Col. William Irvin's old command, is now enjoying a well earned rest. He and his son, John, arrived here from Kansas last week and will spend some time visiting with Centre County friends.

Misses Mary and Lucetta Ward departed on Friday morning to attend the Ocean Grove camp-meeting, thence to New York to visit Cousin Lou and Aunt Caroline Murphy, who are octogenarians. The young ladies will be gone several weeks and when homeward bound will stop over for a visit in Philadelphia.

Last Sunday evening a large congregation assembled in the Methodist Episcopal church to hear Rev. J. S. Pittinger preach to the Penns valley lodge of Odd Fellows. The Reverend had scarcely read his text when he was taken violently ill and was obliged to cancel his sermon. Medical aid was summoned and he soon revived and now is able to attend to his pastoral duties as usual.

Marion Township.

Miss Lizzie Orndorf is still on the sick list.

Reports for oats and wheat are for a fair crop, only.

Miss Eulodie Ertley is spending some time in Altoona.

Mrs. T. P. Beightol is slowly recovering from her recent illness.

J. S. Condo and crew are busy threshing the crops through our valley.

Samuel Aley, our genial cobbler, has not fully recovered from his dislocated thigh, from which he suffered last winter.

The voters of both parties held a meeting on Saturday evening to simplify the formulation of a ticket for the several township offices.

The supervisors are giving us some much-needed repairs on our roads. Let us kindly refrain from criticism when they are doing the best they can.

The harvest home services for next Sunday in the Reformed church promises to be a success. Don't forget the Ladie Aid Society meeting on Saturday afternoon.

Miss Hope Strunk was extended a vote of thanks by the Reformed Sunday school of Jacksonville for the full and interesting report she brought from the Centre County Sunday school convention, held recently at Aaronsburg.

N. H. Yearick, one of the oldest men in the county in the matter of business, and his force of clerks are familiarizing themselves with their spacious new quarters. The old room will be used as a warehouse and also for exhibiting purposes for his large machinery business. Mr. Yearick has enjoyed the patronage of the community for many years and we bespeak a continuation of the same as a reward and recompense for fair and square dealing.

David Long recently sold his barn to Aden Garrett, who will put up a first-class chopper, planer and general utility shop on it. He will derive power from the gasoline engine he recently purchased from the International Harvester Company. Mr. Garrett is an enterprising young business man and we believe he will have to run his shop day and night to keep up with the fall trade, as our farmers have plenty of chopping to do and we need this enterprise very much. Changes incident to the new work are now under way.

M. S. Betz, the enterprising merchant, recently beautified his store room with a new porch on the front and a fresh coat of paint, giving the place all the atmosphere of a modern city store. And the public are not disappointed when they enter this store and ask for the delicacies usually found only in city stores. Mr. Betz is ever striving to cater to the trade of the most critical tastes. Here are constantly found a full supply of the best fruits and vegetables the market affords, fresh from the Baltimore markets, together with a full line of general merchandise, twines and lubricants. Go around and see him about your needs for this fall.

The Josiah J. Hoy farm was sold on Saturday to Jacob Thiel, of Altoona, for the sum of $3920. The community in general is glad to extend the hand of greeting to Mr. Thiel and welcome him back to our midst, where he has been employed in years past by some of our best citizens. He will occupy the farm April 1. This transaction is one of more importance than might be realized at first glance. Our townthip already has too many renters, the farms being owned and controlled by corporations, or the "farm octopus." The benefit to the general public where a man owns his farm is obvious.

Milesburg.

Miss Josephine Kohlbecker has been entertaining Miss Mary Mott, of Bellefonte.

Mrs. Annie Thomas, of Osceola, has been visiting her cousin, Mrs. Lee Green, in Central City.

The Ladies Aid Society will hold a festival here on Saturday evening, September 2. Everybody cordially invited.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Holtz and daughter, Helen, of Clearfield, returned home after a few days' visit at the Edward Confer home.

Our people turned out well on last Sabbath, considering the inclement weather, and were well pleased with the excellent sermon delivered by Rev. C. W. Winey, of Bellefonte, upon "Character Building," after which he proceeded to lay the corner stone of the United Brethren church. In the evening quite a number gathered for an open-air service and were rewarded by a splendid sermon by Rev. Mr. Sykes, of Latrobe, on the evil effects of sin. At both services quite a sum of money was raised through the generosity of our people and the liberality of the visitors in helping the good cause along. For their kindness they have the thanks of Rev. Mr. Dean and also all the members of the U. B. church.

His Castle on the Rhine.

And How He Sold It to a Descendant of Its First Owner.

By F. A. MITCHEL.

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

On the left bank of the Rhine is the ruin of one of those old castles which have stood in that region for centuries. This particular castle some years ago was bought by Carl Bishoff, a German-American who had made a lot of money brewing lager beer. Bishoff bought with the castle a few pieces of furniture, pictures and other curiosities that were several hundred years old and had been handed down from one purchaser to another. With the decay of the castle and the gradual breaking up or loss of these articles all that remained had finally been concentrated in one room, which, when the owner was there, he used for a living and bed room. In this apartment was an antique fireplace big enough to roast an ox. Over the chimneypiece hung a picture that was especially prized by Carl Bishoff.

Bishoff was an admirable amateur chess player. Indeed, he had on several occasions tackled professionals with fair success. The reason he prized the picture that hung over the chimneypiece at his castle was because it represented a curious position between chess players. They were in medieval dress, the one long and thin with a black beard, the other stocky, whose beard was fiery red. The dark man wore his beard at a point, while his mustachios were turned upward, giving him a malignant expression. The red bearded man was of a pleasant countenance. The picture represented him looking on the board, evidently troubled at a prospect of being checkmated by his antagonist, who was regarding him with an expression of triumph. On a plate attached to the frame was the name of the picture in German, "Checkmate In Six Moves." There was a legend connected with the painting that the man who had built and owned the castle would some day return to repossess it. When he came—so the legend said—he would assume the position of the red bearded man in the picture, and instead of being checkmated in six moves he would checkmate in the same number.

Bishoff chuckled at this legend, saying that if any one could get his castle in that way he was welcome to do so. He had studied for hours trying to discover a method by which the short man could save himself and had failed. He considered the problem insoluble, and several chess experts who had seen the picture had agreed with him.

One autumn Bishoff, who had run over from America to Berlin, concluded to pay a visit to his castle to see that all was ready for the coming winter. A caretaker lived in a room that had been repaired and furnished for him and his wife and could provide what Bishoff required in the way of refreshments. Bishoff would be obliged to spend one night in the castle and would do so in the room already described.

It was a lowering afternoon when he reached the castle, clouds hanging low about the battlements. After making an inspection and talking over the conditions with his caretaker Bishoff, who had directed a fire be built in his chamber, dined there, and when he had finished pulled a big armchair up before the blazing logs. Not feeling especially happy in his gloomy abode, he directed his caretaker to make him a hot punch. This was set on a table beside him, and as the hours slowly passed he drove off his loneliness with frequent potations.

Presently he fell into a dose. How long he slept he didn't know, but the first thing he did know the door was opened and a man came into the room. Bishoff looked up, expecting to see the caretaker. He was mistaken. The person who entered was one he had never seen. He approached Bishoff with outstretched hand and with a cordiality that seemed more appropriate for a host than a guest. Then he drew a chair before the fire, warmed his hands and, taking a pipe from his pocket, began to smoke.

"Well," he said to Bishoff, "this is a dismal night without, but pleasant within. I'm glad you've made yourself comfortable."

Bishoff has never been very clear in his statements about this man. Were it not that he has been so sure he was awake and so explicit about some circumstances connected with the visit one would be warranted in assuming that he was dreaming. At first, he says, it only struck him that the man was very queer looking, very queerly dressed and wore a red beard. But at his entrance Bishoff did not connect him with the picture.

Bishoff was so astonished that for some time he made no response. Indeed, he couldn't think of anything to say. Finally he broke silence by asking in German:

"Whence come you?"

"From up the river. I have had a hard pull. Do you know I came near being caught in that whirlpool? I was pulling along when I heard a voice singing. Glancing up, I saw a beautiful woman looking at me, oh, so tenderly, I could not keep away from her. Turning toward the shore, I soon found my boat was beginning to whirl. With a powerful effort I turned and pulled back into smooth water. The singing continued sweeter than before, but I stopped my ears with a bit of cloth I found in my boat and did not look toward the shore. I narrowly escaped the Lorelei."

"The Lorelei!" exclaimed Bishoff. "You tell your experience as if it had really happened. The Lorelei is a myth."

"Call her what you like. I don't wish any more of her. I'll take some of that punch. I need a bracer after my narrow escape."

Taking a mug from the mantel, he poured out some of the liquor and drank it off.

"One would judge from the way you conduct yourself," said Bishoff, "that you are at home here."

"I am."

"What do you mean?" snapped Bishoff angrily.

"Oh, don't get huffy. Let us enjoy ourselves together." Then, noticing a chessboard and chessmen on a table, he added:

"Do you play chess?"

"Yes."

"Well, there is no better way of spending an evening. Let us have a game."

He took up the chessboard, set the pitcher of punch aside, placed the board on the table, arranged the men. Without saying "by your leave," he took the first move. Bishoff, wondering at the man's audacity, lowered his eyes to the chessboard and soon forgot his astonishment in the game. He saw at once that the stranger was an excellent player. The game was a long one, and for some time neither gained an advantage; then Bishoff, thinking he saw a way to checkmate his antagonist, moved and looked up at his antagonist as if to say, "I'll soon have you now, my fine fellow."

The stranger looked up, too, and with a low laugh turned his head toward the picture of the chess players that hung over the chimneypiece. Bishoff glanced from the board to the picture, then back to the board. He started. The chessmen were in the same position as in the painting, Bishoff having the advantage. And then it dawned on Bishoff that his visitor and the man with the red beard were one and the same.

"I will checkmate you in six moves," said the stranger.

"You mean that I will checkmate you in six moves," said Bishoff.

"This against your castle that it is I who checkmates you." He drew forth a draft for 30,000 marks on a bank in Cologne.

"Done," said Bishoff.

His opponent took up a piece and moved it like an automaton. Bishoff moved again. On the stranger's fourth move something Bishoff had never counted on happened. It seemed to him that the tables were turned. After a long time he moved. The stranger moved again. Bishoff, who now lost his head, moved for the fifth time.

"Checkmate!" said the stranger, moving.

"You've won; the castle is yours!" gasped Bishoff.

The stranger chuckled.

"All this is very queer!" gasped the American, staring at the man with eyes as big as butter plates.

"You are mistaken. Nothing is queer. What is, is. You have only certain relations with the world of which you are conscious. You think the past is dead. Nothing is dead. Everything always lives, but all things change. Good night. This castle is now mine, but I leave you in possession for the present."

That's all Bishoff remembers of that memorable evening. The next morning he awoke sitting in his chair. The fire had gone out, and he was shivering. He left without even waiting for breakfast and offered the castle for sale. An agent found a purchaser, and before Bishoff returned to America he met the man in the agent's office to complete the sale.

He nearly fainted on recognizing in the new owner his visitor who had checkmated him at chess.

While the papers were being made out and the signatures appended Bishoff continued to stare at the purchaser, who gave no sign of ever having seen him before. The man was in modern dress, and his beard, though red, was cropped close. He had lost everything of his old fashioned appearance in the picture. In other words, he seemed to have been taken out of the fifteenth or sixteenth century and dropped into the twentieth.

"Have you ever been in the castle?" Bishoff asked him.

"No. I do not live in Germany. I have since my boyhood been in business in South America. It is there that I have acquired the means to recover the home of my ancestors."

At this point the agent finished working on the papers and said:

"Baron Becker comes into his own after many centuries. He is a lineal descendant of the original baron who built the castle. It was lost some 400 years ago at a game of chess. There is a legend that a descendant of its first owner would come again into its possession in the same way that it was lost to the family."

Bishoff was so affected at this information that he signed his receipts and hurried away without asking any questions, much to his regret ever since, for he appears to be in a muddle about the whole affair. The only part of it about which he is certain is that he was wide awake and in his full senses when the events occurred in the agent's office.

He always ends his story with the remark, "There is so much legend about that Rhine country that some of it must be true."

Sure It Was His Wife.

Three o'clock was the very earliest the man could get up to the store, so his wife asked him to meet her then.

"I don't know in what department I shall be at that time," she said, "but just before 3 I will telephone to the clerk at the information bureau near the main entrance, and if you will just step over and ask him he will tell you where I am."

At two minutes past 3 the man sought information as to the whereabouts of his wife.

"I have a message," said the clerk, "from a woman who said her husband would inquire for her about 3 o'clock. Maybe it is for you. She said to tell you that she has gone to Blank's store, over on Sixth avenue, to finish her shopping because the clerks in this store are impudent, the place is ill ventilated and she couldn't find anything she wanted here anyhow and never has been able to find anything here and this is positively the last time she will ever try to find anything here. Of course that might have been your wife"—

"Oh, yes," said the man; "that was her all right."—New York Sun.

Cochineal Insects.

Before many years cochineal scarlet will have become a thing of history only, like the Tyrian purple of antiquity. That is the conclusion of M. Leon Diguet, who has been studying the state of the cochineal industry in Mexico. The first specimens of cochineal were taken to Europe by the Spanish adventurers in the sixteenth century. The Indians had cultivated the coccus cacti, from which the color is derived in pre-Columbian times, and after the Spanish conquest the industry developed rapidly. The city of Oaxaca was the center of the cochineal country in the days of Humboldt, but only a few plantations of the nopal cactus, on which the insects are fed, now remain. The female insects only are used to form a dye, and they are gathered by brushing the branches of the nopal as soon as they begin to lay their eggs. They are then desiccated in ovens or killed with boiling water.

Duel With Horsewhips.

A novel but brutal form of duel between two carters took place at Baja, Hungary. Being both in love with the daughter of the farmer who employed them, they decided to fight for her with their heavy horsewhips, the girl agreeing to act as umpire and accept the winner. In order to insure that there should be no running away, they first fastened themselves to two posts in the ground. The girl gave the signal to begin, and the two men, who were stripped to the waist, began to belabor each other with such fury that long bleeding welts soon covered their faces, arms and bodies. Unable to bear the horrible sight, the girl ran away for help. When she came back with some of the neighbors they found the two men lying on the ground covered with blood and exhausted. The duel was declared a draw.

A Luscious Morsel.

A speaker at a literary dinner in New York said:

"He who writes for posterity can only expect the approval of posterity. To his own generation his work will be as unpalatable as German carp—and you know the recipe for cooking German carp?

"No? Well, then, this is it:

"Catch a German carp in a stagnant and muddy stream. Clean it immediately and hang it in the sun three days to dry. After it is thoroughly dried nail it to a spruce board and cover it with a paste of salt and mud. Let it stand two days longer. Now bake it forty-eight hours. Remove the nails, scrape off the salt and mud paste carefully and then eat the board—never eat the carp."

Why the Head of a Lion.

A custom there is in most parts of Europe to adorn aqueducts, spouts and cisterns with lions' heads, which, though no illaudable ornament, is of an Egyptian genealogy, who practiced the same under a symbolical illation. For because the sun being in Leo, the flood of Nilus was at the full and water became conveyed into every part, they made the spouts of their aqueducts through the head of a lion.—Sir Thomas Browne, "Vulgar Errors."

Eskimo Beliefs.

Eskimos believe that earth and air are filled with spirits. The one drags men into the earth by the feet, from which they never emerge, the other strikes men dead, leaving no mark. They often stop and listen and say that Tuna of the wind is passing by, imagining that the air is full of voices.

Extremes of Temperature.

Science reasons that the lowest temperatures at the earth's surface are not found directly at the poles, but at some distance to the south of the north pole and to the north of the south pole. Likewise the greatest degree of heat is not, as might be supposed, to be found at the equator, but prevails at some distance to the north and to the south of that imaginary line. The coldest place on the earth's surface of which there is authentic record is in Siberia. The lowest temperature ever recorded in the open air was 90 degrees below zero F. at Werchojansk, central Siberia, on Jan. 15, 1885. The highest temperature of which there is an authentic record is 124 degrees above zero F. in Algeria, northern Africa, on July 17, 1879. These places of extreme heat and extreme cold give a range of temperature covering the whole inhabited world of 214 degrees, or two degrees more than from zero to the boiling point.

Don't Breathe Lazily.

"If you are consumptive, if you think you are drifting into consumption, sing!" said a medical man.

"Of course singing alone will not save you from consumption or cure you. Besides singing you must have plenty of fresh air and good food. And, speaking of fresh air, I must say that not one person in a hundred knows how to inhale it. People seldom breathe deeply enough. They seldom properly ventilate their lung cavities which resemble stuffy, insanitary apartments, where all germs thrive undisturbed. Acquire the habit of taking the big, deep breath which is a primary requisite for any kind of singing bad or good, and the physical joy derived from it will never allow you to relapse into lazy breathing. Furthermore, the mere effort of singing compels the singer to stand straight and to throw out the chest, a good corrective for the bad physical habits of weak chested people."

Killed by a Shout.

A joyful shout thoughtlessly given by an Italian smuggler on having eluded the customs guards on the Swiss frontier was the cause of his six companions being killed by an avalanche. The party, coming from the Grisons, had, with a thousand precautions, successfully negotiated the Forcola pass on the Swiss-Italian border. Five of the men were loaded with valuable contraband goods, and two acted as guides and scouts. When they were all safely on Italian soil one of the guides named Maretoli gave vent to a joyful yodel. In the still air the least sound causes a vibration which may set enormous masses of snow moving. This is what occurred here. A quarter of a million tons of snow detached itself from the mountain side and came thundering down upon the party, who were swept in an instant into an abyss. Maretoli alone was able to extricate himself.

Checkmate!

In these days, when various schemes are being suggested by which the loser of personal property may recover it without offering an extreme reward, it is interesting to note two advertisements which appeared last summer in a German paper. In these advertisements nothing so bald as a suggestion of reward appeared. They seem merely to present two wits fencing, and the reader forgets the matter at stake:

Berlin, Aug. 5.—The gentleman who found a purse, valuable beyond explanation, in the Blumenstrasse, is requested graciously to forward it to the address of the loser, as he is recognized.

Berlin, Aug. 6.—The recognized gentleman who found a purse, valuable beyond explanation, begs that the loser will call at his house at the earliest convenient hour.

The Green Kind.

A naval officer who has seen considerable service in South American waters once brought home two parrots, one of which he gave to the housemaid and the other to the cook.

For a long time there ensued animated discussions as to the merits of their respective birds. Finally the housemaid said:

"Your parrot may be a better talker than mine, though I don't believe it." Then, with an air of presenting the final clinching argument in her favor, she added, "Besides, you'll have to admit that mine has the most beautiful foliage."—Lippincott's.

Honored the Old Men.

A unique festival occurred in Paris in 1797 in honor of the old men. The idea was the encouragement of the family circle, and the old man who was a happy grandfather was held up to the younger generations to follow in his footsteps. "A gracious Hebe crowned their white locks with garlands of roses, while the soldiers of France presented arms in their honor."

SUMMER SALADS.

Served In Cucumber Cups Are Deliciously Appetizing.

Cucumbers suggest a pretty, new salad that is delightfully offered in cucumber cases.

The chief ingredient is fresh crab meat, which, after being removed from the shells, is lightly flaked with a silver fork. The cucumbers are first peeled and the inside removed carefully with a spoon. Take the seeds and juice thus obtained and stir them into a quarter cup of French dressing.

Let this mixture stand twenty or twenty-five minutes on the ice. Strain through a fine sieve and beat up once more to mix the conflicting ingredients thoroughly. Mix part of this dressing with the crab meat and reserve the other portion in which to marinate or steep the cucumber cups. Stand both in the icebox to become cold.

Mix the crab flakes carefully with a nice mayonnaise dressing made by the usual household recipe and fill into the melon cups. Arrange the latter on tender lettuce leaves. Finely chopped green peppers may be sprinkled over the dish, which is a repast in itself without conveying any impression of too great heaviness.

For another salad which is designed wholly or in part to take the part of a meat dish make an unsweetened cucumber jelly by the usual recipe and pour it into a ring mold.

Cook till tender a few young summer beets and an equal quantity of tiny French carrots. Cut these into fancy shapes, if you prefer, with a vegetable cutter; but, whether or not you shape them, steep them for just a few minutes in cold spiced vinegar. While the jelly is forming drop in the vegetables.

When serving time comes unmold the jelly carefully on a platter and fill in the hollow center with a mayonnaise of sweetbreads made as usual.

The platter can be decorated with tiny lettuce leaves or with more of the fancy vegetable forms.

A Useful Fall Coat.

For motoring and all kinds of outdoor sports nothing is more useful than a long coat of polo cloth. Last season this material was made up into a loose, belted garment, but next fall the lines will be closer and the coat smarter and more chic in design.

The illustration shows the newest cut in these coats, with a modish hood lined with a contrasting shade of silk. Polo cloth comes in gray and tan tones.

Jammaking.

Do not allow tin, iron or pewter to touch the jam, as the color will be spoiled.

Everything employed in jammaking must be scrupulously clean.

The sugar must be of the very best.

The jam should be boiled until on dropping a little on a plate it jellies. Boil fast to preserve the color and stir well.

All scum must be carefully removed as it rises.

Dry fruit requires the addition of a little liquid to prevent its burning. Water, rhubarb or currant juices may be used.

The jam must be stored in a dry, cool place, free from drafts and in an even temperature.

If any jam is spilled on the jars when pouring it in wipe it off at once with a damp cloth wrung out in hot water.

Iced Tea Pointers.

To obtain the best results in making iced tea remember, first, that it should not be too strong; second, provide cracked ice in abundance in each glass, adding a slice of lemon for those who prefer this acid flavoring to sugar. It must always be borne in mind that tepid tea is tea in its least palatable form. This beverage must be really hot or absolutely cold. Pulverized sugar naturally dissolves more readily than granulated in this as in all cold drinks. Some hostesses add either a sprig of mint or a cherry or two to each glass to give an additional flavor. Special glasses are now sold for iced tea, with spoons which are much taller than those articles usually are.

Good Money After Bad.

It is a curious fact that many men, level headed enough about other things, seem to lose their wits entirely when they become involved in lawsuits. In one case recently concluded in the German courts a Berlin merchant paid out over $900 to recover the value of a five cent postage stamp. He had written a letter asking for an address and inclosing postage for reply. Failing to get an answer, he sued for the stamp.

The famous Missouri watermelon case was just as trifling and even more disastrous. The seed was planted on one farm, but the vine crept through a crack in the rail fence, and the melon grew on the other side. Both farmers claimed it, and instead of perceiving the humor of the situation they went to law. To add to the puzzling features of the question of ownership there was the further complication in that the fence stood on a county line, whereupon a question of the jurisdiction of the courts came up. The farmers bankrupted themselves without obtaining a decision as to the ownership.—Green Bag.

Liquid Dynamite.

The Mexicans have a native brandy called aguardiente, which is a species of liquid dynamite, as palatable as corrosive sublimate and as full of potential deviltry as an egg is of meat. When you find a Mexican gentleman adorned with a belt full of deadly weapons decorating and deluging his interior with aguardiente it is the part of prudence to retire to a bombproof. There is another tipple, a white, innocent looking fluid called mescal, which is distilled from a cactus of the same name, which has in it all the combined energy, activity and homicidal possibilities of a volcano mixed up with the gable end of a mule. In former days the Apache Indians made a crude distillation of the same stimulant, which they called tis-win, and as a preliminary to a raid among ranches and settlements it was a great success from an Indian point of view.—Boston Herald.

The Crocodiles Dived.

The cunning of wild animals in concealing themselves in moments of danger is well known. A party, spending a week on the Nile, were watching eight or ten crocodiles sunning themselves on the surface of a small lagoon. It was determined to trap these monsters, if possible. The water was breast deep, including about two feet or more of heavy mud. Four nets were tied together, so as to make one long enough to reach across the lagoon, and this was weighted on the bottom. This net was drawn with long poles from each shore, and behind the net came a line of men a yard apart, prodding the mud with poles. The scheme looked like an admirable one, but the crocodiles sleepily dived, and that was the last seen of them. The water was dragged backward and forward, but they had burrowed so deeply in the mud that not one could be found.

A Political Genius.

Congressmen sometimes adopt queer expedients to gain the good will of their constituents. Years ago a member from a western state was afraid that his first term would be his last, as he had not managed to make himself a power in congress. While he was debating what he should do a friend said, "You live near the center of the United States, don't you?" "Yes." "Then why don't you introduce a bill to have the capital moved to the principal town in your district?" The congressman introduced the bill, and the people of his district at once concluded he was a great man and sent him back for another term. He reintroduced the bill in the next congress, and, although it was promptly pigeonholed in committee, his constituents gave him a third term as a reward for his genius.

The Blushing Octopus.

The octopus frequently changes in color like a marine chameleon. It would appear, from studies of this creature, that the colored pigment whereby this change in color is effected is contained in envelopes in its skin, in the tissue of which are muscular fibers actuated by nerves. Should these fibers become relaxed a dark pigment appears. The phenomenon is said to be analogous to blushing.—Harper's Weekly.

Corrected Him.

A reporter was once interviewing Thomas A. Edison.

"And you, sir," he said to the inventor, "made the first talking machine?"

"No," Mr. Edison replied, "the first one was made long before my time—out of a rib."

Three Not of a Kind.

Sir Henry Maine's famous political diagnosis is worth quoting. The king of England reigns, but does not govern. The president of the United States governs, but does not reign. The president of France neither reigns nor governs.—Boston Herald.

CURRANT COMBINATIONS.

This Fruit Combines Well With Others of the Small Kind.

Currants combine well with several of the popular summer berries and small fruits like cherries. Huckleberries, raspberries and blackberries are each delicious when cooked with about one-third their bulk of currants. Currants are sometimes added in a small quantity to a raspberry or a huckleberry pie.

Stewed huckleberries make a nice compote for supper on Sunday evenings, and currants added to it are often considered an improvement. For a plain huckleberry compote add a cupful of sugar to every three cupfuls of berries and stew them in barely enough water to keep them from burning. Currants may be added in any amount preferred. Half and half make a good mixture, but a third of currants is also satisfactory. If two-thirds of currants and one-third of huckleberries are used more sugar will be required.

A well known cook offers the following recipe for a raspberry and currant marmalade: Rub two quarts of raspberries and a quart of currants through a sieve that is fine enough to exclude the seeds. Add a pound of sugar to every pint of pulp. Boil the sugar till it strings in a small quantity of water and in another kettle reduce the fruit to one-half its original bulk. Then mix the two and boil them down together to a thick marmalade.

Canning String Beans.

Owing to their composition green string beans are particularly liable to fermentation, as they are inviting to the bacteria that cause this process. For this reason they are best canned by the sterilization method, which, although it requires a little more time, is many times more satisfactory than any other. It is accomplished in the following manner:

Select young and tender beans, string them and break them into short lengths. Pack them firmly in the jars, cover them with cold water and add one teaspoonful of salt to each quart. Put on the rubber and the top and boil for one hour on each of three successive days. At the end of the hour remove the cover of the boiler and allow the steam to escape. Press down the spring or tighten the lid on the jars, according to the kind used, to prevent any outside air from entering. The jars can be removed and cooled or allowed to stay in the boiler till the next day.

On the second day loosen the lid again. This will relieve any pressure from steam that might accumulate inside the jar during the second cooking. Place the jars again in the boiler and boil for one hour.

Repeat the operation the third day. In removing the jars from the boiler care should be taken not to expose them to a draft of cold air while they are hot, as a sudden change in temperature is likely to crack the jars. The lids should be tightened securely. If spring tops are used it is easy to test the completeness of the sterlizing process. This is done by releasing the spring at the side of the jars and picking up the jars by the top. If there has been the least bit of decomposition or if the sterilization has not been complete the top will come off. This is because pressure on the top has been released by the gas formed by the bacteria.

Things Nobody Knows.

There are many strange facts about animals which no one has ever seemed able to understand or explain. Here are a few of them:

A fly will crawl to the top of a windowpane, fly back to the bottom and crawl up again. Hardly ever does it fly up and crawl down.

Hens scratch for food always with the sun behind them so that its rays will reflect on the tiny seeds. Yet a blind hen, for which this reason does not hold, always manages to get the sun behind her also when she scratches.

Cats hardly ever lie with their feet to the fire. In most cases they lie instead with their left side turned toward it. But dogs invariably lie with their fore paws to the fire.

A mouse overlooks a perfectly safe food supply, sufficient for a meal or two, to enjoy the perilous pleasures of an unlimited store. It will hide near the food and come out to nibble when it is hungry, for it is not true that a mouse runs to its hole at the first alarm.

is of 18 carat gold, delicately wrought and inclosed in a crushed octagonal shaped leather case.

The queen's cyper and crown in diamonds ornaments the front of the book, while the arms of the company presenting the gift are displayed on the back of this charming souvenir.

Peruna Secrets You Should Know

Golden Seal, the root of the above plant, is a very useful medicine. Many people gather it in our rich woodlands during the summer. Few people know how valuable it is in dyspepsia, catarrh, and as a general tonic.

Many thousand pounds of this root are used each year in the famous catarrh remedy, Peruna. This fact explains why everybody uses Peruna for catarrh.

Ooping the Baby.

"At the first sign of an attempt to standardize and sterilize the babies," says Ellis Parker Butler in Success Magazine, "I organized the Fond Fathers' Oop-de-baby Association of America. For thousands of years fathers have been permitted to oop-de-baby unrestrained, and this right was one of the first rights attacked by the advocates of the automatic baby. I considered it a double blow at the baby and at the father and resented it as such. If a father may not oop his own baby, what is the world coming to? Ooping a baby is a father's greatest pleasure. It is the act of grasping the baby under the arms, tossing the baby into the air and catching it on its down trip, while the words "Oop-de-baby!" are repeated at each toss. This is repeated until the baby is hysterical or drops on the floor by accident. It is then handed to its mother."

Bones Stronger Than Oak.

The wonderful power of bone structure has been tested scientifically to show how that hollow bone bears strain. A very small bone, only one square millimeter (.0155 square inch) in diameter, will hold thirty-three pounds in suspension without breaking, while a piece of the best oak of the same thickness will hold up only twenty-two pounds. The bone is therefore half again as strong as the solid oak, thus showing that nature is economical in the weight given to bones, making them hollow and at the same time makes them stronger than if they were solid and much heavier. This principle has been recognized in mechanics, engineers using hollow steel tubes instead of solid to meet great strain.—New York World.

Tobacco In Vienna.

"They have a way of asking a stranger when he comes to Vienna," says a letter from that city, "'Who is the largest, the most reliable, the smallest, the best and the worst dealer in cigars and cigarettes in Vienna?' Of course the stranger does not know the answer, and the native tells him triumphantly, 'The government.' The government has the monopoly, and every person employed in a tobacco shop—they call them 'trafik'—is a government employe."

The Best She Could Do.

"There is only one reason," he said, "why I have never asked you to be my wife."

"What is that?" she asked.

"I have always been half afraid you might refuse."

"Well," she whispered after a long silence, "I should think you'd have curiosity enough to want to find out whether your suspicion was well founded or not."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Damascus Swords.

It is seldom that a really good specimen of a Damascus sword can be obtained, for the art of working and engraving the kind of steel of which they are made is lost. These famous swords were made of alternate layers of iron and steel so finely tempered that the blade would bend to the hilt without breaking.

A Checking Account

In every community there are many persons who know nothing of the safety and convenience of a checking account. They do not appreciate the fact that being a regular bank depositor entitles them to many privileges and conveniences in business which they could not enjoy otherwise. They have not found out that by being a bank patron a man puts himself in position to ask and receive wise counsel in business and financial matters from men more experienced than himself and, moreover, the bank depositor is in the way of getting much more substantial aid from the banker than mere advice.

Misses Mary Knisely and Mary Osman, who were visiting with their cousin, Miss Luella Fulton, at Tyrone for a week or ten days, returned to their homes in this place on Monday.

Miss Anna Symmonds, a daughter of George Symmonds, of Altoona, was a genial caller at this office yesterday, her mission being to advance their subscription to "The Republican" another year.

At the United Brethren church parsonage, in Bellefonte, Grant Ellenberger, of Juniata, and Miss Sue E. Houck, of WarriorsMark, were married by Rev. C. W. Winey on Thursday of last week.

Mrs. George G. Fink, of Martha, was in town between trains yesterday. Her mission could hardly be said to be the pleasantest in the world. She spent virtually the entire day in the dentist's chair.

Mrs. Cora Lucas, of Clearfield, who has been visiting with friends in Unionville, spent several hours between trains in town yesterday. Mrs. Lucas will be recalled as formerly Miss Cora Jones, of Milesburg.

P. F. Wingard, a valued subscriber of "The Republican" at Coburn, was a welcome caller at this office on Monday. While here Mr. Wingard very generously advanced his subscription away into the next year.

Miss Bernice Landis, of Bellefonte, was one of the successful contestants in a popular voting contest recently conducted by the Williamsport "News." She won a prize in the shape of a handsome gold watch.

About the only baseball game of the season on the local grounds thus far scheduled will be that on Monday, Labor Day, between the Cuban Giants of Bellefonte and the Milton Giants. Admission 25 cents. Game called at 3 p. m.

The wedding of Miss Jennie Harper, of Bellefonte, and Mr. Archibald Saxe, of Scranton, will take place at noon, on Saturday, September 2, at the home of the bride's brother, G. Edward Harper, at Curtin. It will be informal, no invitations being issued.

One of our always prompt-paying subscribers is John Colpetzer, whose home is near Bellefonte. Adhering to his rigid rule of being up-to-the-minute, Mr. Colpetzer several days ago called and advanced his subscription to "The Republican" to almost the end of 1912.

J. M. Bunnell, who conducts a leading music house in Johnstown, announces that he will be at the Grangers Picnic, at Centre Hall, September 9 to 15, with a complete line of pianos, organs, sewing machines, graphophones and musical merchandise of all kinds. Mr. Bunnell calls especial attention to his exhibit of high grade pianos and piano players. 3t

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Clemson came down in their automobile from Storms. town on Monday and spent the day greeting friends and attending to some shoppieg. They had planned starting for home early in the afternoon, but a threatening storm and the fact that they were traveling in an open car kept their courage at a low ebb and the result was that they did not make the venture until along toward evening.

The valuable homestead farm of Henry Kryder, late of Porter Township, deceased, which was offered for sale at the Court House on the 18th inst. was adjourned to September 2, 1911, at ten o'clock A. M. at the Court House, in Lock Haven, Pa. Any one desiring to purchase a good productive farm under a high state of cultivation with buildings thereon in good condition physically should attend this sale.

The services in the Bellefonte United Evangelical church on Sunday, next, will be of unusual interest. In the morning Rev. J. F. Hower, the pastor, will preach on the subject: "Does it pay to be a Christian?", and in the evening, at 7.30 o'clock, Rev. I. P. Patch, district superintendent of the Altoona District of the Anti-Saloon League, will speak on "The Liquor Oppression and the Commonwealth's Emancipation." All are cordially invited.

Students who attend the Lock Haven State Normal school are always well pleased with their choice. They not only have home like surroundings and more than ordinary conveniences but they receive the personal attention of the Principal and faculty. Their health is safe guarded as well as their morals and parents can always feel that their children are well cared for at this school. The management of the school invites visits from parents and those interested in the great cause of education. Write for its catalog.

An enjoyable time was had by a number of young folks on Monday evening at the home of Miss Grace Vallimont, who entertained in honor of Miss Gertrude Ramsey, of Altoona. The evening was given over to games and music and delicious refreshments. Those present included Mr. and Mrs. Harry Murtorff, Miss Helen Kramer, Miss Marguerite Coxey, Miss Bella Johnson, Miss Grace Blackford, Miss Keturah Rider, Miss Hazel Johnson, Mr. and Mrs. Morris Kramer, Miss Belle Lowry, Wilbur Burkholder, Edward Gates, Benjamin Swartz, Sidney A. Keifer, Van Jodon, Herbert Gray and Alfred Klepfer.

Fresh Vaccine Tubes at Green's.

Prof. C. L. Gramely, of Rebersburg, was a Bellefonte visitor yesterday.

Miss Lucy Spotts has returned home after a delightful trip to Atlantic City, Philadelphia and Bethlehem.

Miss Julia Bidwell, of Pittsburg, is enjoying her vacation with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. H. M. Bidwell, on South Allegheny Street.

Henry Fox, shoemaker for A. C. Mingle, this week moved his household effects from the Twitmire property on Water Street into apartments over the "Keystone Gazette" office.

Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Crider, Mr. and Mrs. Hugh N. Crider and Mrs. Charles E. Dorworth and little Charles, Jr., comprised a party that yesterday departed for a ten days trip to Philadelphia and Atlantic City.

The offering last Sunday morning at the Harvest Home service in the Bellefonte Reformed church amounted to $22 for ministerial relief. The flowers, fruits, vegetables, etc., were sent, as usual, to the Bellefonte hospital.

Mrs. Robert Sechler, of Spring Street, underwent an operation at the Bellefonte hospital on Tuesday. Her condition was regarded as extremely critical but yesterday she showed improvement and was able to take some nourishment.

The Ladies Auxiliary of the Y. M. C. A. will conduct an exchange, from 2 until 5 o'clock, on Saturday September 2, at the Y. M. C. A. rooms. Veal loaf, beef loaf, pies, cakes, bread, pickles, candies, etc., will be offered for sale.

Five Bellefonte boys one day last week skipped away from home, presumably bound for the wild and woolly west to hunt for Indians. Pretty nearly all of the number are again at home and the Indians are safe for the present, at least.

Harry Baum departed yesterday for Francisville, about twenty miles from Chicago, where he will be engaged during the next four or five weeks in closing out a large clothing store for a firm which will open up a new establishment in another city.

David Chambers, of Clarence, was a business visitor in town Tuesday. Davy said that he had been waiting for a week for the roads to clear up so that he might make the trip in his automobile, and that he finally was compelled to fall back on Martin Reese's Black Diamond Express.

Rev. Dr. George Hawes, of Braddock, occupied the pulpit both morning and evening on Sunday, last, in the Bellefonte Prosbyterian church. Thus far he has not indicated whether he will accept the call tendered him several weeks ago. The work of repairing the parsonage is, however, being hurried to completion in order that it may be ready for occupancy when needed.

Bellefonte Castle, No. 357, and Queen Temple, No. 148, will attend the twenty-fourth annual meeting of the Susquehanna District Association of the Knights of the Golden Eagle, at Lock Haven, on Monday, Labor Day. A special rate of 96 cents has been granted by the Central Railroad of Pennsylvania for the round trip between Bellefonte and Mill Hall. A cordial invitation to the public to attend the meeting is extended.

Mrs. S. E. Satterfield and Miss Hester McGinley returned home on Tuesday evening from SanFrancisco, where they had been visiting since June. While in SanFrancisco they had numerous exciting experiences. They happened to be in a train that was wrecked and on another occasion they experienced a shock from a slight earthquake. Enroute home they stopped over at St. Louis, Chicago, Pittsburg and other points, reporting having had a most enjoyable time.

The Ladies Aid Society of the Bellefonte Presbyterian church will conduct an automobile trip from Bellefonte to Milesburg and return this (Thursday) evening. The cars will assemble at the residence of Miss Mary Thomas, on Allegheny Street, at 7 o'clock. Round trip 10 cents. The run will continue as long as passengers can be secured. Everybody is invited, and a pleasant evening for all is anticipated Ice cream and cake will also be served at the home of Miss Thomas.

Moist Marshall, many years ago a resident of Benner township, but now residing in Indiana, is enjoying a visit of several weeks with old Centre County friends. It is 31 years since he left Centre County and cast his fortunes with the Sunny South. During his sojourn here Mr. Marshall is being piloted about by County Commissioner John L. Dunlap. Years and years ago Mr. Dunlap was Mr. Marshall's school teacher, which no doubt explains the latter's success in business after he grew to manhood.

Professor J. F. Potteiger, leader of the Pennsylvania Railroad band, at Tyrone, accompanied by Billy Rover, the expert trombone player and all-around good fellow, was in town yesterday on a little scouting trip. Whether they had their eye on Sam. Bryant, he of the sweet-toned cornet, could not be learned. The Professor happens to be a bachelor and it is entirely possible that he was here to look over some of the girls who admired him in his band uniform on the day of the business men's picnic. While we are not in possession of the facts, we are ready to gamble that it was Sam. Bryant's cornet rather than a prospective bride that lured the genial professor to Bellefonte.

Genial and welcome callers at "The Republican" office on Saturday of last week were I. L. Burwell and his daughter, Miss Viola, of Pine Grove Mills. Mr. Burwell dropped in to advance his subscription to "The Republican." Miss Viola and her sister, Miss Leona, recently enjoyed a visit with their brother, J. A. Burwell and his wife at Tyrone. While chatting on politics, Mr. Burwell expressed the hope that the Republicans of Centre County will renominate and re-elect County Commissioners Woodring and Zimmerman. After a visit to the Court House he expressed himself as well pleased with the improvements there, adding: "I am satisfied that the present board of commissioners have done good work in repairing the Court House. They had the courage to do what numerous grand juries recommended. In order to put the Court House into good condition they have been willing to put up with the dirt, annoyance and work accompanying the making of the repairs. If any men deserved a re-election Messrs. Woodring and Zimmerman do. They have more than earned it and I hope they are rewarded by the people. I, for one, am going to do my part to reward them."

PICNIC RATE STANDS

Central Railroad Will Not Increase Excursion Rate to Hecla Park.

It is a pleasure to "The Republican" to state that the Central Railroad Company of Pennsylvania officials have no thought of increasing the excursion rates between Bellefonte and Mill Hall and Hecla Park next year. The authority for this is Frank Warfield general freight agent of the Central.

In regard to the recent advance in the regular one-way passenger fares, as outlined in "The Republican" last week, Mr. Warfield desires it understood that the increase is in line with a general readjustment of rates following the collapse of the Dunsmore 2-cent fare law. That law, which was passed in the early part of the administration of Governor Stuart, was eventually declared to be unconstitutional. At the time of the passage of the law the Central, together with other railroads, lowered their rates to 2 cents per mile. The 2-cent fare law having been wiped out, the Central is readjusting its rates. Although advanced all along the line the new rates, according to Mr. Warfield, are not as high as was the case before the Legislature endeavored to establish a maximum rate of 2 cents for all railroads in the State.

Recent Weddings.

Miss Sarah E. McKivison, the accomplished daughter of John McKivison, of Scotia, and John C. Martin, of State College, were married on Saturday, last, by Justice of the Peace W. H. Musser, in Bellefonte.

A pretty wedding was solemnized at Blanchard on Friday of last week, the contracting parties being Miss Emma Mae Bitner, of that place, and Don R. Mader, of Lock Haven. The ceremony was performed by Rev. W. H. Patterson.

On Saturday, last, William W. Westbrook and Miss Alfretta E. Sensor, both of Tyrone, were married at the parsonage of the Bellefonte Reformed church. Rev. Dr. A. M. Schmidt officiated.

Miss Nora May Housman and Clyde W. Stover, both of Millheim, were married at Aaronsburg on Thursday of last week, the wedding ceremony having been preformed by Rev. W. D. Donat.

Henry H. Fry and Miss Elsie M. Kragle, both of State College, were married at that place on Wednesday of last week, Rev. I. A. Sassaman officiating.

Vaccination Law Unchanged.

Officials of the State Department of Public Instruction at Harrisburg state that numerous letters received at the department from school officials in various parts of the state indicate that an erroneous impression prevails that the compulsory vaccination law relating to school pupils has been repealed.

"The idea has gotten abroad, probably because there is no mention of vaccination in the new school code, that it is no longer required. This is a mistake," said A. D. Glenn, deputy superintendent.

"The vaccination law, which is a health measure, was passed several years ago and is in force today just as much as it ever was, although the code is silent on the matter. The requirements of last year stand as they were and certificates of successful vaccination must be presented."

Fine Coach Stallion.

The Bellefonte Coach Company on Friday of last week received from Columbus, Ohio, a fine, dark bay coach stallion, which is on exhibition this and next week at Christ. Beezer's livery. The old stallion was exchanged for the new one. Those who have seen the new stallion, which weighs 1500, or 200 more than the old one, say that it is one of the finest specimens ever exhibited in this section.

If you have not made up your mind as to the choice of your school for the fall term, write to the Lock Haven State Normal school for a catalog. There are still a few rooms that can be secured, although the coming year promises to be the largest in the history of this school. It has an ideal location, fine equipment, and in some respects the best Training school in the state. Its library is also one of the most attractive, is carefully catalogued and is made up of a fine collection of books. Students are taught how to use the library and when they graduate they are capable of organizing small libraries in the public schools. Its laboratories are arranged in such a way that each individual student has a table to himself. It has organized a working museum which is both attractive and useful. The fall term begins September 11th.

THINK THIS OVER.

You say you can make more from your surplus than a life insurance policy will make for you.

How much comfort of mind will your "increased earnings" bring you when you are ill and face the question of your family's needs?

Mental worry and illness combined speeds death.

Mental ease contributes to longevity.

A Royal Union policy is the greatest balm in the world for that feeling of uncertainty about your family's future if you are no longer here to provide for them, and for the time when age will impair your activity. No policy is better secured or yields a better return to its holder than the ones issued by the Royal Union.

Boys, and Their Clothes

Ordinarily Boys' Clothes are purchased by the parents, but the boys we have known seem invariably to have been supplied with a world of ideas of their own.

This is the kind we have chosen and incidentally they have the quality and value demanded by American parents.

They are the highest class in the world but are moderately priced.
